from it had ignited other material and there were two little fires burning. Well, we rushed and covered the area between the fires as quickly as possible, and we found later that two had ^{not} actually been seen, but we had a moment there of fearing our revelation might have been understood. It is easy to misunderstand a revelation. You have to study it carefully to know exactly what it does mean, but this we know. There is no accident in God's revelation. That He gives us is true and dependable.

So we made our way on the next morning, made our way down this gorge and got down to the bottom quite easily, to our surprise. There were only two places we needed to use the rope. Then we started down that gorge, and when we had gone a short distance, we saw foot prints, and we couldn't imagine how foot^{prints} could get here. We found later that when _____ came up it was this very gorge he had come up. Now, of course, that doesn't mean he could have known he could have gone up that recess; it doesn't mean he was seeking a purpose in doing it, and if he had he would have been way out in the wilderness fifty miles from anybody, but it was mighty interesting that he should have come up the very gorge that first day that was the one we now went down. Well, we went on down the gorge, climbed up onto the plateau, and crossed the plateau a way, and there was the knoll and there was the little tent, and there were the boys, and we sat down in the little tent and munched chocolate bars, and after a little while the time came when we were to give the signal, and then again they spoke into the radio and we heard the people up above, "Have you seen anything of the rescue party?" and they said, "Yes, they are right here." And we could hear them talking up above. They realized they were right there, with the boys. All we needed was the shoes and then we could go on up. And then soon a plane came overhead and we saw the plane and then we saw a package drop down-- down, down, down and disappear over the side of the cliff. We rushed out, and it was way over in the gorge and we had _____ hunting it and _____ That was easier _____ to go back _____ and get another pair of shoes. Well, one of the fellows went to the walkie-talkie and he
