Since most of our students Since there was hardly one student in ten who came to us with any knowledge of Latin, even though all of them had college edu degrees, it seemed to me absurd to make this a requirement for someone entering by examination. I felt that Greek should be substituted. Woolley vigorously opposed this. Finally he conceded that we might permit someone to substitute Greek for Latin of the Were to make this request. I desired in such a case that we man make it known that we were willing to make the substitution on request. This he vigorously opposed, and insisted that mx our stated requirement must be Latin, and only if on the am man applying on his own volition asked should ask that Greek be sutstituted should we make such a substitution. This seemed to me typical of the rather minor points on which Woolley and I had disagreement. I don't do not believe there was any vital max point on which we had any disagreement but in matters of such matters as this we nearly always seemed to be on opposite sides. ONe day I had to leave the meeting early and so I requested that whimsically suggested that in my absence Mr. Wolley Woolley cast a vote for me on anything that came up opposite to his own. Afterwards I was told that when a matter came on the first matter that came up tobe voted on he actually tried to do this. He was, I believe, a very conscientious person, even though we idffered on so many minor points. Of course the faculty refused to allow him to do that, I was told.

The faculty included three men who had belonged to the Christian Reformed Church or at least had been raised in that church. These were R. B. Kuyper, Cornelius Van Til, and Stonehouse. I soon began to observe that every time we needed someone for a speake at opening or commencement, or wh wished to consider someone as a new faculty member Dr. Stonehouse always would suggest someone from the Christian Reformed Church. church. When he did this Dr. Machen would immediately turn to Dr. Van Til and ask him what he thought. Almost invariably Dr. Van Til would say, "Well, Tif if you wish to go outside of Presbyterian circles probably you culd do no better than to ask this man. Ned Stonehouse was brought up in Grand Rapids, attending schools of the Christian Reformed church. After graduating grom Calvin College he went to Princeton Seminary and was in the same class as I. with me. Then he went to Holland
