either of them had done in the past and during the seven years that I taught Beginning Hebrew my students made great progress. However, that is not the subject of my present discussion, but Dr. Allis. So I return to the friendly first year.

I saw comparatively little of Dr. Allis during that the rest of that first year after I was in Dr. Wilson's class, but the friendhalp that had been established during the time when the was my guest in Los at Angeles the previous summer was continued by an occasional very friendly meeting, and continued durin the three during the summer after the second year when the General Assembly had at turned down Dr. Wilson the Dr. Machen for professor of apologetics, times were very excited exciting at Princeton particularly among Dr. Wilson, Dr. Allis and the group that stood with them in wishing to keep Princeton along the lines line (?) it /had been on in the past, and I was in a position in which I heard a great a great deal of the personal discussions of these men. After two years I thought I would go to Germany for the summer and Dr. Allis thought it would be a good idea to go over and take courses at the university during the summer ocurse and get myself, he said, "Learn the ropes of a German university." However, one afternoon Dr. Wilson came over to the dormitory, went (?) up to my room to speak to me. He was very, very much disturbed. He had sent many students to Germany to study and a number of them had lost their faith while over there. He urged me, he said, "Do not go to Germany until you have had your full course; get your solid work -in systematic theology and apologetics. Without it," he said, "you would nto be able to resist the liberal teaching in the classes," and so he urged me not to continue my previous idea of going to Germany for the summer before finishing the course.

There were one or two times during the second or third year when Dr. Allis had two of three students of whom I was one at his home in Philadelphia a guests. We had a very pleasant time. He was indeed a gracious exgenties gentleman. I realized though, as I talked with him, that he was one who was a great stickler for small points, and there were a number of points of somewhat greater than small
