

may have said to him. I was very busy and did not think of him much during that summer, but near the end of the summer I heard that Dr. Allis had returned from Europe. I inquired where he was and it took several inquiries before I learned that he and his wife were staying at that time at a hotel out near West Chester. I managed to get him on the phone and when he came to the phone and I heard ~~his~~ his voice it seemed so good I said, "Oh, Dr. Allis, how good it is to hear your voice." He said, "Yes," in such a cold and ~~ix~~ distant way that it was like throwing a ~~cup~~ tubful of cold water over my head. I went on to say make a few friendly remarks and he merely replied, "Yes," "Yes," in that generally unfriendly way, and I never felt quite the same over with regard (?) to him again as I had before that phone call.

Dr. Carl McIntire, who was very busy with us in the plans for the new seminary (and who, as far as I could see had not at that time developed any of the personal qualities that became so disagreeable in later years) had looked back on his contact with Dr. Allis with a very fond feeling and he said to me one day, "Oh, I wish Dr. Allis was were a premillennialist so he could be with us in the faculty of the new seminary." My guess is that Mr. Allis said to Dr. Allis, "Now, why don't you find out about this new seminary they're starting and see if whether you can't join with them." At any rate I got a call that Dr. Allis would like to have lunch with me one day in Philadelphia, and we ~~xxxxx~~ arranged to meet at a ~~xxxxx~~ certain restaurant. We ate there and we did not get into personal matters or doctrinal matters or anything of the kind at all in a very pleasant conversation, but in the course of it I remarked to him that Carl had said how he wished that Dr. Allis ^{were} ~~was~~ a premillennialist so that we could invite him to join with us in founding the new ~~xxxxx~~ seminary. Of course Dr. Allis, I think, understood from that that with the attitude he was taking towards the prophecies-- the attitude that we were taking was quite different. Our meeting was very pleasant. Two or three months later, however, I was at the University of Pennsylvania where I attended courses for the next twenty or more years. I was
