and teaching take a tremendous toll of my nerve energy.

After continuing to teach for 17 years beyond for more than 17

| 7 | years beyond the point when == at which most men retire I feel that I can justly say that I have done what you suggested and taught as long as I can.

During these years I have been led to believe I have made a very positive contribution to the development of three different seminaries and that my input in the administration of weach of them acced I have also felt had reason to believe that the great deal. teaching I had given had been very well received and had made a real contribution. I have warmen never felt, however, that the immediate teaching was the most important thing that I could do. Never have I been content simply to mepeat ideas I found in books or to pass on ideas that I had received from others. In every subject withwhich I have dealt I have tried to get to the bottom of its meaning and to see how much of what is generally thought is solidly grounded and how much is based merely on conjecture or guess work. I believe that during the years God has given me many imprimi insights and understanding of many truths. I believe He has opened my eyes to many things in the Scripture and has given me an understanding of many facets. These I have passed on to my students as opportunity afforded. With the heavy schedule that I have so often carried I have time after time opened up a subject, gained many insights, seen aspects that need to be clarified and commonly repeated, statements that need to be proven false, have given a good introduction to these matters to the class, and have considerable of the insights that the Lord has given me packed away in rough form, in rough notes, or in tapes of lectures. Generally, however, then I finished the Course Generally I have taught to the very limit of my
