

be of me to separate from him over the matters that they are concerned about. That was doubtless true so far as issues were concerned, but it is much more sensible to ~~xxx~~ think of strategies and possible outcomes, and I think my viewpoint one of not having thought things through, as would have been good. At that time I could not go along with the strong opposition to them that

One of the things that offended me early and greatly about Carl was his callous way with individuals. He would win them to him, would gain great support from them, and then he would cast them aside as if they were nothing. Here was Dr. Buswell, who got himself fired from ^{Wheaton} ~~Wheaton~~ largely because of his standing for Carl, and what Carl stood for, and Dr. Buswell went along right with him to the extent of following him in matters where I felt that he was definitely wrong, minor matters, but where I thought it was foolish of Dr. Buswell to be quite so subordinate to him as the position that he willingly took for a time. / ~~Then~~ ^{And then} when matters came up where Dr. Buswell ~~was~~ was irritated at things Carl was doing Carl said to me, "I think we're going to lose Buswell," and in the end I might say he tossed him aside as of no value and I was personally very disgusted with that. The same was true, even more so, in the case of Steele, because Dr. Steele followed Carl to the tiniest point. Anything Carl said was true. I would talk with him as I had previously to Bennett or Armes. I would talk to ^{them} ~~him~~ maybe for 45 minutes and they would agree that what I ~~thought-was~~ favored was good, absolutely they were for it, and the we'd get into a meeting and Carl would say five words against it / ⁱⁿ and they would immediately start to speak / ~~in~~ the other direction and Steele just did naything that Carl wanted and followed him and then when ~~xxxx~~ Carl got upset over two or three minor matters he just cast Steele aside and I thought that was one of the most foolish and most short-sighted things that I ever saw him do. The same was true of Ketcham. Dr. Ketcham stood with Carl so faithfully on so many things and then when ~~w~~ there were comparatively minor differences and Ketcham wrote a long letter to Carl asking him to moderate a bit Carl reprinted Ketcham's letter in the Beacon so ~~xx~~ small it was difficult to read and then in larger type
