

said in the clause to it about unity or anything like that. But in the general statement, the pope expressed that the Christian church may be unified, yes but no change in dogma. How do you unify then? The pope is infallible, the pope is supreme, but let's get unity. How do you get unity? It reminds me of Robert Easger. I heard Robert Easfer give a sermon back in 1920 or so. And Robert Easfer said, "What is the word that represents Mohammedanism?" Submission. What is the word that represents Buddhism? He told what represents many religions. What is the word that represents Christianity? He said unity. Unity is the key word says Robert Easfer, a Christian. Then he said, ~~the~~ustaremently I was up in New York and I saw a missionary that had just come from Africa. He said this missionary had gotten a tropical disease there and his body was just burning up and he was in a terrible shape. He said they gave him some medicine and he got the best treatment that modern medicine could give and he said that man told me it just seems as if his body was all at war with itself. He said his head felt fine and that all the rest was at was and then it went down and the upper part of his body felt fine and then it went down to the knees and the fingers and toes and then at last he said that he had the most wonderful feeling of unity. So unity was the key word. Well, Robert Easfer had a voice. I wish that I had one-fifth of his voice. He could say anything and people would just marvel. There was a wonderful Christian leader sat in front of him and he said, "Oh that is marvelous." I said to him later, is that what you would say, that unity is the key word to Christianity? Well, I never thought of it that way, but that was a wonderful message. Well, he told me two weeks later, he said you know I saw six or seven fine Christian friends of mine this last couple of weeks and he said that hadn't heard Robert Easfer and I asked them, "What would you say the key word to Christianity is?" And he said you know, I was impressed. Not one of them said unity. But these people sat and listened to that wonderful voice and never stopped to think what the word meant. It was just the imports of the personality. We need education that brings people to think. Not to be swept away by the beautiful voice
