

The only place where we would expect to learn anything about in the Genesis deals cosmology is ~~the~~ first chapter. The second chapter ~~deals~~ principally with the making of man and starts at the point where at least three fourths of the creative activity. By far the greater portion of the creative activity described in chapter one had already been completed and goes on from that point.
Making ~~references~~ references back to certain of the previous events. These references should properly be translated into pluperfect. They are rendered in a past tense in English, which ~~tends to~~ can be so interpreted as pluperfect
