

The term theistic evolution seems to be an attempt to reconcile two utterly divergent views; ^{the view that all forms of life} the view that the Bible is true, and have developed from one simple beginning by natural processes without any divine intervention at all.

It assumes that in some way God has worked from the beginning, but that all of His work has been done by purely natural processes and that all life has developed from one simple start. This contradicts the Biblical account at many different points and cannot

[to p 4]