

certain other things unstated. If someone, knowing I had come by train but not knowing on which line I had come, were to say that I had come down on the Pennsylvania, he would be adding another element beyond his knowledge. If I had actually come on the Baltimore and Ohio, inspiration would not mean that the man would be led necessarily to say the right train on which I had come, but that he might be led to omit mention of the particular line on which I came, and simply to say that I came on the train.

The writers of the Scripture had many erroneous ideas, as all human beings do. Inspiration means that they were kept from putting these ideas into that which they wrote.