

between two things which are definitely and logically related to one another in the plan of God. And you find definite relationship always where ever there is a relationship between Adam and Christ. I am not so sure that the word type is so good there. It is very important, the relation between the two, Adam and Christ, the similarity, but it is not so much a divinely purposed ~~it~~ illustration as it is a real principle of similarity, because of the inherent nature of the situation. And of course there many such things in the Scripture. And it might be good if we could make that a different category. And I think that it is a category that can be very useful to us. We study matters in the Scripture to see their relationships and see how the two things which have a basic relationship just how far the secondary relationship extends.

(question) Yes, that it is a type looking forward. I am not quite sure whether it is a type.....(13 $\frac{1}{2}$) We observe it, we remember the Lord's death till He comes. The primary element is looking back. Now is there also that which is looking forward? Christ said, I will not, you will not eat of the fruit of theThere is certainly something suggested there, that looks forward, but whether that would be the primary purpose or not is the question. It seems to me that it is primarily a illustration of our relationship of our present relationship, that we are feeding on Christ in reality today, it is so very important in it that I would be inclined to ~~think that~~ think that the future relationship is not.....(end of record 3)

.....(question)There is no chair in there? How do we know there is no chair in there? Well, it does not speak of any ~~chair~~ chair in the earthly tabernacle. Therefore there was no chair put in the earthly tabernacle to represent something. But there might have been chairs in there without representing something, we don't know. We have no statement that there is no chair. I think you could have an illustration in a sermon to say that we don't find any chair mentioned in the tabernacle, now it is interesting that there is, that ~~the~~ Christ is the only one who
