of the city. The Tiergarten is a big park with trees and   here and there, and a nice change for a student of Babylonian and Egyptian inscriptions to get out there and walk about among the trees, and look at the (8½)statues of former presidents and kings that stood there.ᵗᵏ/ᵗᵏ Now I walked over the the Tiergarten and/into the other end of it, I saw as I came to some buildings which used to be full of people (9) with orchestras playing and   happily 30 years ago and I saw that, unlike the part of Berlin in which I had walked   a few days and you'd never dream (9¼) you come here to the Tiergarten and as you get to this end you see ruins everywhere. And over here (9½) and then there's a great big stone standing up there and I thought I wonder what that is, like a wall standing, nothing of (9 3/4)

And I remember seeing

And then I saw a sign facing and this sign said "Another twenty metres in this direction and you will be leaving (10½)

And there, just a step from this section with life and music and all (10 3/4 (record unclear to end, 14½)
