

the war would have been lost. That holding, holding gradually giving way was tremendously important, perhaps/^{even} more important than the exhilarating rush forward which gave the final end to the war. We can't see the whole picture. God may put us in a place where it's discouraging, where it's disheartening, where we don't see much effects, much results, but if we are doing our best and looking to Him constantly and trying to serve him to our utmost, what we do there may be just as important in God's sight as what someone else does whom God has put in a position where he is moving forward rapidly and seeming to accomplish great things.

We cannot see the whole situation as God^s sees it and therefore a superiority complex or an inferiority complex is quite out of place. The question is are we learning what abilities we have, exactly what potentialities we have, learning to develop them, use them to the utmost and accomplishing the most we can for the Lord ~~Jesus~~'s purposes, and God sees the end and knows the results. We don't know.

C. S. Lewis has written a book called The Great Divorce which -- by which he means the great difference between Heaven and Hell. The difference eventually between the saved and the lost. It is a short book but very well written which in an imaginary way brings out very vividly the vital qualitative difference in the end between the saved and the lost. But in the course of this in his picture of Heaven he shows a-- he says he looked and he saw people coming singing, Hallelujah welcome to heaven, this is grand you are getting here and all this great celebration over the arrival of someone. And he said, O my this is one of the great Christian leaders of the decade that is getting all this celebration that they are coming, this is. he said, I wonder who this is? Somebody I have heard of a great deal. And he went to see who they were having this celebration for and he said that, he asked someone, Who is all this for? And they said, That Miss Henrietta Jones of Podunkville. He said, it was someone people had never heard of but who in God's sight had accomplished more for Him than many of those who received great celebrations and adulation for what they accomplished for the Lord. God's sees the whole situation and He knows whether
