

After this length of time we have no way of knowing what caused the event; far more important is the strong evidence that it did occur. We do not know whether God supernaturally produced something new, or whether He prepared natural forces through the centuries in anticipation of this event. The important thing is that God did what He had declared He would do. He caused that Jerusalem should remain trodden down of the Gentiles until within our own generation, and even up to the present the temple has never been rebuilt.

Perhaps the temple will be rebuilt one of these days. Perhaps the times of the Gentiles are nearly over; we do not know. The condition that has lasted through the centuries is still visible as evidence of the fact that God can predict the future and that He has done so in the Bible.

Today anyone can go to the cities of Babylonia and see the fulfillment of Jeremiah's prediction. Anyone can go to Tyra, to Thebes in Egypt, or to various cities in Asia Minor, and can see the various conditions that were predicted in the Old Testament. Dozens of Old Testament predictions were literally fulfilled in events connected with the first coming of the Lord Jesus Christ. We can trust the Bible. What it says is true.

Curiosity about the future has greatly increased in recent years. This is natural in view of the uncertainty of the times. It has been a shock to me to hear about your difficulties.

About a century ago Charles Dickens, who had no special friendship for our country, reported, after traveling extensively through the United States, that a woman could walk in perfect safety at any time of day or night in almost the land. This is no longer the case.

Quite a few years ago, when I first began teaching and was not yet married, I lived in a room in the heart of Philadelphia. Every evening I would walk for an hour or two up and down the various streets in the inner city. It never occurred to me to fear that I might be attacked. Recently I happened to mention to a friend how

Dear Mr. Green:
Michigan 49501
Grand Rapids
P. O. Box 2455
Mr. Jay Green