

there is no other generalization known to man which is of the least value in giving the fact of science any sort . There are no other hypotheses except the outworn and easily repudiated theory of special creation, now held by the dogmatic and prejudiced. If you don't accept that the God created that God has done it, how can you account for it? And as I say there is no other explanation to account for it except Evolution/ by a natural process

And they may think it is easier to think of a tiny little amoeba, a simple thing and out of that you develop a complex thing. And when you think of all the complexities coming into existence, actually it is impossible, if you don't have a God Who created it. So you have those who try to say well God created it, and then it went on to develop from natural processes.