

all to see. Within 8 years he had succeeded in getting complete control in Germany. Then during the next 5 yrs. Winston Churchill rose repeatedly in the British House of Commons and pointed out how Hitler was strengthening Germany and what he was planning to do, and people laughed at Churchill. They considered this man in his 60's who had once been a man of ability and was now a has-been to be a calamity howler. They paid little attention to him.

When Hitler decided to seize Czechoslovakia and the people in England became scared of it and began to get some of them to practice with means for the defense of their country, the Prime Minister Winston Churchill said it is most amazing for the sake of a little country far off from us, most of us can hardly pronounce its name for the sake of that we find ourselves practicing digging trenches and practicing putting on gas masks. And they laughed at it. There was no secret about it.

Hitler had made perfectly clear what he had planned to do. He conquered all of western Europe, and on the channel saved England from conquest. If the U.S. had not come in to it, it would seem most likely that Hitler would have succeeded in his plan of world conquest.

People laughed at Hitler; and paid no attention to what he said. There is no Hitler in the world today. But there is a group of men --something far more effective than one man no matter how much he has of magnetic ability.--a group of men who have very cleverly worked up a system whereby this group indoctrinates others in their ideas and carries on their plan to gain world conquest. They make no secret of their intentions. Khrushchev said, We will bury you. That is their definite intention. No secret is made of it, whatever. Thirty yrs. ago America was far superior. We of course do not want to conquer any other nation. We have no desire to injure any other nation. And most of us think why should any other nation seek to destroy us?

I saw on TV the other day when it was announced that young men of a certain age should all sign up for possible draft. They had a young man come on and he said, I don't want to hurt those Russians! I don't think they want to hurt me. I'm sure they don't want to hurt me. I'm sure there are Russians in Afghanistan today who do not want to go to Afghanistan. They don't want to hurt the people. But they are in a dictatorshipship stronger than everxx Hitler's was, which has moulded the Russian nation into an instrument which can be used for its purposes.

Before 1914 the great Russian fields furnished grain that could feed many sections of Europe. Today they have to import great amounts of their grain. There are two reasons for this: One is that under the Communist system inevitably under any bureaucratic system efficiency greatly suffers. But the other reason for it is that they are putting all their energy into building ships, building atomic launchers, building missiles and preparing for world conquest. Afghanistan is much nearer to us today in terms of time to get there than Czechoslovakia was to England in 1914.
