

Important questions about various liberal writers

About the prophetic books of the OT°

This information could be gained from books on the prophecy or prophets of the OT°

It could be gained perhaps from introductions to the OT°

It could perhaps be gained ~~xxx~~ from books on particular books of the Bible.

What does this particular liberal writer think about the prophets? Does he consider that they were rather crude predictors of the future, and that ~~was~~ was all?

Does he think that they had rare insight or merely stumbled upon a few things of value?

Does he consider that they were innovators or that they were conservative forces?

Does he consider that they were opposed to the priest priests, or that they were standing with the priest priests?

Does he consider that they were associated with the king in some an official capacity, or that they came out of the people and often opposed the king?

Does he consider that there are precise equivalents to them in other lands? If so, what lands?

Does he consider that there are ~~things~~ ~~situations~~ situations somewhat similar in other lands, but not precisely identical? If ~~so~~ so, what lands, and how similar?

Does he consider that they were quite unique and not to be paralleled in other countries?

Does he consider that they were social reformers who were/interested in improving social conditions?

Does he consider that they were men of rare spiritual insight?

Does he think that they were making up the story that they spoke by divine ~~inspiration~~ <sup>stories (?)</sup> inspiration, or that they really believed it?