

Other sorts of fruit tress.

There is some evidence that lemons may have been grown by the ancient Babylonians. "The Greeks called these 'Persian Apples.'"

Sennacherib tried very hard to introduce..... into Assyria.

In addition to trees there were vegetables of various sorts grown in the gardens. Discussion of different kinds of these.

Flowers were also grown. (page 211).

In spite of this great variety of products the Babylonian soil was utterly devoid of nut trees or trees furnishing wood to burn.

Reeds played a great part in the Life of the Babylonian, though they were hardly a good substitute for the lack of wood.

After this a discussion of the various kinds of animals used.
(pages 212 to 224.)

Hunting and fishing. (pp 224-227)

Whether the enemy of the dog, the cat, was in Mesopotamia during antiquity, we can not yet be certain.

Finis

Premiere Partie.