

When I was doing some work one summer at the University of Chicago during the early forties Frank wrote me that he would arrive in ~~Chica~~ Chicago on a Sunday morning at a certain time. I went ~~to~~ over ~~to~~ to the station to meet him. When I got there I found that Wilbur Smith was there too. I'm not sure I had ever met Wilbur until that time, although when I was teaching at Westminster Dr. Allis told me once that Wilbur Smith had asked him if whether he would give him some lessons in Hebrew, because he'd like to learn a little Hebrew, and that Dr. Allis had said it would be impossible for him, but that he had an extremely capable assistant and that if Wilbur desired he would ask me if whether I would be willing to give him some tutoring in Hebrew. However, I never heard anything from ~~Wilbur~~ Wilbur then. After that I had no further connection with him until I went to Europe to buy books for the seminary library. At that time somebody suggested that I write Wilbur and ask him for advice about ~~books~~ books to buy. Wilbur gave me a list of books that he would like to have for himself and also mentioned certain book stores that he thought might helpful. I had quite a list from
