

has inherited, but what he is able to earn that gives him power. The United States of America has been largely free from the artificial shackling of hereditary power or established systems. Enterprise has been freer than anywhere else in the world. As a result, this nation has become the most powerful nation in the world today. It was not the war that made the United States powerful. Actually it poured more resources into the war than Germany, Russia, and Great Britain put together. The war weakened, rather than strengthened, America. It simply made apparent the great amount of strength that had been latent here. What produced it was the opportunity of free enterprise, which stimulated the ~~ability~~ abilities of its people and caused that those industrial and economic ability and leadership should come to the front, not simply because somebody liked them and appointed them or because they were able to ~~pe~~ persuade somebody to vote for them, but because they proved their abilities in the hurly burly of competition and activity.

The free enterprise system is the hen that laid the golden egg. Modernists and World Council leaders desire to kill the hen and take the gold that is in it and divide it up, so that all will have future advance be killed, but our nations will, inevitably sink back to an economic standard much inferior to that which we now enjoy.

The failure of the socialistic principle has been frequently been demonstrated in the ~~history~~ history of Soviet Russia. Thus, in the '20s it was necessary to introduce the so-called "New Economic Policy", ~~by~~ by which a large measure of free enterprise was permitted in Moscow marketing. By this temporary return to ~~free~~ free enterprise, the economy was pulled out of the morass ~~into~~ into which it had fallen.
