

completely eradicated from the earth.

This authoritarian ideology has resulted in the ruthless extermination, even according to the statements of its own leaders, of millions of peasants in Russia, and of hundreds of thousands of individuals in China. It has declared its determination to subject the whole world to its will and to destroy all who differ from it. This determination has been repeatedly expressed in its literature and in the public statements of its leaders.

Americans are too ready to forget this fact, and to allow themselves to be deceived by the language of the Communists, who often use words in altogether different senses than we do. They constantly talk about wanting peace, but what they mean by peace is complete Communist domination. Peace to them means the destruction of all human liberty. Peace to them means the end of all Western governments as at present constituted. Peace to them means the extermination of all individuals who do not follow their ideology. This is very different from what we mean when we speak of peace, but is entirely consistent with the Communist objective of world domination and world conquest.

Communists teach that words are not intended for the purpose of conveying truth, but of accomplishing the purposes of those who use them. They will promise anything, if only they can gain their ends.

At the Potsdam Conference in 1945, the victorious powers agreed that Germany should be administered as a unit, with each of the four powers taking responsibility for a certain section of the country, but with all of them working together for the establishment of democracy. As a part of the implementation of this program, the city of Berlin was divided among the four conquering powers, with each having primary responsibility for a certain section of the city, but