

Chinese custom. Every day he would come and he would bow to her, and she would bow to him, ^{he would} and speak to her about little things, and of course if it rained, he would not come, and he was about ~~50~~ fifty but he would explain that his mother would not let him go out in the rain. But then he would spend an hour talking to her about the marvellous civilization of China and the wonderful high ethics of the Confucius, and then he would go ahead and read the text, and that little girl in that family of those marvellous missionaries who ^{did} ~~have done~~ so much in the evangelization of China was indoctrinated with the belief of ~~Conf-~~ that Confucianism was far superior to anything Christianity has to offer and ^{she} he holds that ~~he~~ ^{she} believes ~~it~~ ⁵ ~~it~~ till this day. It is clearly in her book, and yet you go through the book and ^{you will} ~~how~~ read how she tells about the Amma who took care of the little children in her family, and she says, they came by a place ^{one day} ~~named~~ where they saw this woman crying and ^{there} lying beside her a little baby with a head broken with stones and the blood on the floor, and her mother asked her, What is the matter? She said, she had ^{girl} three babies and ^{every one of them} their father simply had taken a stone and crushed the head in, because he wanted a boy, and so her mother was kind to the woman, and she remained there the rest of ~~her life~~ their lives, and she was very devoted to them. As you read about the end of the Manchu ^{churian} / dynasty, and how her mother would look out through the window and see these Manchurian women who had been raised in luxury and used to being the head families in China, ~~making around~~ ~~trying to escape~~ and seeing them hiding behind the trees rushing around trying to escape... her mother ^{wanted to} ~~would~~ open the door and let them come
