us to take a little time and look at this question and see what answer we can get to this question. There is another question also which I think is rather important and that is there are many cases in the New Testament where it speaks of watching, watching, "Watch ye for ye know not the day nor the hour when the Lord may return. Now there are a number of these cases and I think we want to examine these cases because it is more than once--it occurs a number of times, and let us find out exactly what is meant by it. Does it mean watch constantly to see the signs of the times, to see evidence that Christ is coming back. It is a very interesting thing that there are two words which are translated "watch" in this connection and neither of them is ever used with a direct object. They are not used with a direct object nor are they used with the word "for". They are not used of watching for Him. They simply are translated "watch" and this English word "watch" is a word which has gone through considerable change in the course of time and it is--we're all too apt to think when we come across this word "watch" that it just means our present idea of "Watch". "I'll ride down in a green car and I'll stop for you. You be watching for me so that I won't have to wait or find it impossible to park." Is that what this word "watch" means? I think that is the common interpretation. Be watching so that He won't find you not looking for Him. We read in the book of Titus, "looking for that great event, the return of Christ, but that is not the word used in the command here. It is a different word altogether which is used here. I think that is then something that it would be well for us to get definite evidence on. We have all these passages and we must not explain them away. We must not push them aside. There is a definite command that Christ gave to His disciples and He gave it on repeated occasions. Now was this command given on repeated occasions a command that only applied to a few people in a long distant time or was it something they were to do. Was it something the whole Christian Church is to do, and if it is, what is it they are to do? Is it to be looking and see the signs of the
