

civilization. Now the troops left Britain, and the men there, the 2 1/4 who had become peaceful and subject to the Roman officials, pe- protected by Roman legions for 350 years, these people now fo-found it difficult to protect their country, and for a number of yya-years they held the wall, and kept the Picts from- and the Scots out, but finally, in about the middle of the century, the people from the southern part of Seetai- Scotland began breaking through the wall and coming in, and plundering the territory in northern England. And the Britains sent many groups of people to many people to Rome, or to 3, to beg the Romans to send them help, and the Romans said, "We have nothing that we can do for you." And so when they couldn't get help from the Romans, finally in 449, in the middle of the century, they sent over to northeastern German,^{to} a section not from Denmark, and over there they sent to a group of the Germans known as the Saxons, and they said, to them, we will pay you well, and we will give you some land, enough to live on and better than what you have here if you will come over and live us and help us fight against these people who~~s~~ are attacking from the north. And so^{of} this Germanic tribe, some of the people came in, they found it was good country, and they said, Let's go back for others, and more of them came, and more of them came, and enough of them came over to drive back the people from the north, but soon they got tired of turning them back, and they turned to ~~attacking~~ the people to the south. And for the next hundred and fifty years we have no record of events in Britain. For a hundred and fifty years there was nothing written that has come from the land, no written records, no accounts of anybody's visiting the country during the period, but during the period the Anglos and the Saxons and the Jutes, three different Germanic groups were swarming into the country, and they were setting up kingdoms here and there in the country, and conquering it, and also a hundred and fifty years when finally visitors go to the country again, and things have settled down to where--
