

rather than one of the character , it would be naturally for him then to expect people to do what he ordered them to and become when they did not. And there are one or two cases where Leo used language about other people for failing to obey him which seems to us to be unjustifiable . But Leo in his character was a man on whom we know nothing to be said in reproach of his character without one possibility which I have mentioned , he was a man of powerful energy and Farrow, the Hollywood director , in his book The Paegant of the Popes in which he goes through the history of the Popes beginning to the end in some cases simply accepts the picture the Roman Catholics ~~gives~~ gives and other phases he reads enough of it to try to give us a real human picture of it, particularly in the more recent centuries. It is interesting to read ~~of~~ how he will say of a certain pope , he ~~did~~ really did not feel up to facing the problems of his age so he ~~spent~~ spent his time in his garden admiring the flowers, and he speaks that way of many of these popes of recent centuries. But no one could ever say such a thing of Leo, he rose early and he worked late, and he devoted himself to the work which he thought God had called him , he did tremendous amount and he took an interest in the whole church of Christ and he was interested in seeing how the church could be helped and in any situation anywhere a man thought the local authorities were mistreating him in some way Leo was ready to give him a hearing and to assist in an authoritative way what he thought was right in the matter. Quite different in the case today where we have the preachers in Boston College trained by the Jesuits who says declares that it is necessary for salvation to believe in the supreme authority in the pope of Rome and they were dropped from their position and their teachers were ordered no longer to act as a Roman Catholic priest and they sent a petition to Rome last year asking the pope to intercede in their behalf and the pope sent them a message or one of his secretaries did giving them his apostolic blessing and telling them the archbishop of Boston ~~decided~~ was the man to decide the matter and he decided that they should not be allowed to perform any functions as Roman Catholic priests and so they would repent from their error, thinking the pope ~~was~~ was the supreme one
