

had been married before he became a bishop and in those days it was alright priest to marry as it is still is in the eastern church. While he had married when he was a priest not a bishop they say and consequently that explains how he had a son and this son became pope. I don't think his name is so vital but I will mention it as this point, Silvirius but I mention ti at this point. He reigned for two years then he was removed by the emperor under the statement that he was in correspondence with the Goths, now when the Goths ruled they allowed the pope to have correspondence with the emperor, but now the emperor had control he said that this man was in treason correspondence with the Goths and drove him from bishop and drove him into exile and later died whether a natural ~~and~~ or a violent death, we do not know, the emperor then put in a man as bishop of Rome and this man was named Vigilius, and his name is worth remembering, his name means a man who is wide awake, and who is watchful, and he seems to have been very watchful for ~~his~~ his own interest, and very much a priest as far as the good of the Vigilius was the man who Boniface tried to make his successor but in 532, Boniface tried to make him his successor but they would not stand for it, and he did not become successor then but he watched his chance and now after Eastern, or the emperor had control, and Vigilius had gotten himself in with good friendship with the emperor's wife and she thought he was the man who would do what she wanted him to do and he promised her that he would nullify the decrees of the council of Chalcedon and pronounce the the one who had been deposed as bishop of Constantinople but pronounce him to be orthodox if he was ~~made/bishop/of/rome~~ made bishop of Rome, that is stated in many historical books simply as a fact that he had given these promises in order to be made bishop and then she explained or persuaded her husband to make him bishop and to depose the man who was pope and accuse him of correspondence with the Goths and send him into exile and so Vigilius became bishop of Rome and he reigned from 538 to 554. He had long and disagreeable reign as bishop of Rome, this was not only for the church but for himself.
