

there was the highest number ever attended, 110-174, so you see it was not a large group. It included three papal legates, 2 priests and a deacon, the emperor presided in person, so again the pope did not preside nor did it represent, the emperor presided in person, but pope A had written a letter giving the Scriptural position on this matter and in the 18th and last session the doctrine was defined in almost the very language of the letter of pope A to the emperor and so his letter was read and his language taken over pretty and just as was the leader in pope was here in this council of Const. This 6th ecumenical council which was held in Const. Sometimes called the first Synod, after the name of the hall it met in, but the 6th Council is the main thing to remember about it, the 6th ecumenical council is condemned to monofisitism, it declared the orthodox view, that Christ has two natures and they are stated in , two full complete natures, two wills, a human will and a divine will and that this is the Scriptural teaching, the view which the church regards as the teaching of the Scripture and their decisions stated that the heretics are condemned to hold the Monofisite view, men like Sergius of Const. and Honorius of Rome and they named other men and so the 6th ecumenical council which is accepted by the Roman church as an ecumenical council layed a curse on a bishop of Rome for holding a false view upon this matter and pope A died that year, his successor Leo II confirmed the 6th council as an ecumenical council that was authoritative to the church and all heretics including his predecessor Honorius and the form of declaration of adherence to the faith which each bishop of Rome had to declare on his becoming bishop of Rome was several centuries after this included an explicit condemnation of the heresy of pope Honorius, the infallible Honorius I condemned by the succeeding pope as a heretic for his views and I have here (question) Agatho. I have here Mac 's book, the Outlined History of the church by centuries and this book by Mac which is a Roman Catholic book with the declaration of the pope, the confirmation of the bishop used in Roman Catholic schools says
