rapidly. By effort is not in this history to give you all of the important things but to give you an understanding of those things which are important in the development of our prestne religious world as we have it today.

And so I tried to give you something of the background to the general history, particulary that which is important in the relation to our present development.

There hass been a strong resistance through the ages absolute and autocratic, and the minute he dies everyting that he has done and says disappears with him, the new pope is supreme and that has prevented the establishment of dynasty, and it has made it easier for tit continue as an organization, now the period has varied from time to time, for fact in those very centuries we were just speaking of there has been considerably. dispute, should the laity have a voice in the salection of the bishop, and sometimes they had a great deal of voce, and other times they had none but it was still in the state of flux, is it the laity or the roman clergy that select him, t one thing however is definite, that the pope is the bilhop of Rome, the bishop of Wilmington, or Baltimore, or Los Amgles, or of Paris. or of Naples, has absolutely nothing to say as * to who shuld be bishop of Rome. The bishop of Rome is selected by the Romans and no body but Romans have anyting to say about it. He is the head of the churhc universal, according to the Roman CAtholic, not because he is selected by ' the church universal or that they have any say over him but because he is the successor of Peter, therefore as bishop of Rome asn only as bishop of u Rome k(question) The college of Cardinals selects the bishop of Rome.

I was thinking of giving you a question of What have we learned thus far about cardinals? That would be easy to answer because thus far we have learned nothing about them. Becuase they wer not important in ancient times. But Mr. Fowler has asked the question and I think it is a very vital one, the cardinals are the local clergy of Rome. No one is a cardinal because hr id an American or an Englishman or , he is a cardinal because he is a deacon or
