Theoroetical he could be a subdeacon in this country, and be a cardinal in the church of Rome, in fact, in the middle ages we ha e many men who were subdeacons in different parts of Europe who happened to the son of a King or some prominent position and the pope delighted to honor him so he made the man a cardinal, but they were very far from having any influnect intheir own area, in other words We looked tthe papacy and the franks the last time, the very vatal development which the Franks, the Frankisn kings got advantage from the relation to the papacy and the papxy got advantage from them. And it helped to establinsed the papacy in the position it could never have other wise. Now we go on to the ninth century number IX 800-900. We are going to run rahter briefly thought this century thous it was just as long as not any other century. There were many poeple who lived in it and many who had things happen in their lives and the were interesting evets, which accured, from the view point of church history it is not important as some of the other centuryes, there were not as many things that occured, in importance to us today, there were a few and we finat to look at those few outstanding ones. So I am going to make A simply a general view of the century and for the central view of the centry, as to the polt itical situatuon , you sitll have the empireein the eszat , but the empiree in the east has recgoniazed the western empire, they have recognized as nothing new, they have recognized they have an eatern and westen emperor. power was made alight in the west for a long in time but it did not harm to recognized this fact. Our interest in this course is more, yes with these two to quite an extent though not specifically with the individual rulers to any great extent, in this cnetures in the rapdd way we are going to look at Now for the west our w intereest is natually greater because it is nearer tous and in the west Charlegmane who had establised the holy Roman empire was succeeded by his sna , whose name I am not going to make you rmember because hs is npt a figure of on-fifth the importance as Charlemagne, though he succeeded him and was probably more important historically than most historians recognize. He rienged for about 40 years ans emperor.
