

and she said, my, it seems so good to have you back in the same country. I had been then in Jerusalem where it took three weeks for a letter each way - three weeks there and three weeks back - six weeks between writing a question and answer and they didn't have any ..(11) in those days. I got bakk and here I was back in N. J. and here I was in New Jersey, or in Philadelphia and she was in Montana. You see how relevant.

Now in this case "you'll be". You are sitting back here and I say come on up here with me. You're out in front and I say come on in here with me. You're living down in South Philadelphia and thinking of moving and I say come up here and live with us - you might come and live within a mile. You're in California and I might say come back east to Pennsylvania with us. You might come to Pittsburgh and live. You see the "with" is a relative - relation to what you're speaking of. Now for Saul to say - or Samuel to say, "you'll be with me" wouldn't necessarily mean in close association. It could mean that you'll be in the same condition which is very - in the same condition to this extent; that it is a very different condition than the condition you're in now. You're not ~~XXXXXX~~ lawfully be on earth, you'll be in the ^{disembodied} ~~XXXXXXXXXXXX~~ state. You'll no longer be actively doing what you're interested in and having relationship with your living relatives - you will instead be in the intermediate state ~~waiting~~ waiting for the ressurection ~~XXXXXX~~ of the dead. "You will be with me" in this large category, eventhough possibly quite very sharply differentiated. Possibly ..(12 $\frac{1}{2}$).. But I mean the "with". Relatively it makes a difference how big a picture of the area is, don't you think? So that it doesn't seem to me that the "with" means necessarily in the eyes of the writer of Samuel there was no important difference between his futnre state and Saul's, but it would show that there was great differences between the state in which he was and the state in which Saul would be on the one hand and the state in which Saul now was. They couldn't live together in a house. It would be "with them".
