

he did drink a little beer at night to make himself sleep.

End of Record 44

Of course that's where the Roman Catholic Church has through the ages recognized that principle - that the church has no right to employ physical force. And consequently, the church, even in the days of the inquisition

But then they said as far as physical compulsion was concerned the church said, "There's nothing we can do. We don't have any force

Actually the church was exercising terrible physical compulsion. Of course that is a danger in all bodies - we make a principle and then we can get around it - but we must try to avoid it. But I think we should recognize the principle that compulsion should come from the Spirit of God on the individual rather than by any acts of ~~KKK~~ our compulsion. Of course you cannot altogether avoid external compulsion. For instance if we get together and we raise a lot of money and establish a church and want it to stand for certain doctrines, it's only reasonable that we should try to safeguard that that property be used for the doctrines we believe in - and that over the property to that extent is certainly our right but for us to bring force to compel the individual, that's between them and the Lord and if they turn against our doctrines it's perfectly right for them to leave our property and raise a new one. (Student question) Now there's a very good point. The idea that the Apostles were in everything they taught, free from error.

I think they made mistakes but I think that that

Now what they wrote down includes reference to their actions and in their actions I think they made mistakes. I think that the communists in the early Christian Church (3.75) But we don't find in the Scripture any command They carried it out as a voluntary thing.