

very definitely a pastor. I don't think there's any question of that and I think the New Testament definitely teaches it. (Student question) Vote every year on it. Well I think there is something to be said for it but I do think that the disadvantages of that often a vote are greater than the advantages. Perhaps something like this could be worked out - there would be a vote taken, maybe every six months, but it would just be a vote of confidence which the ruling body would examine and it would lead them and /would not be made public and if it got to a certain point then it would have to be made public - something like that. But I just fear that in some cases it would make a man a man-worshiper rather than a God-worshiper. Not always, but there would be a danger of it.
