

desires. His will is made effective by the success of his attack, and consequently, he rules ~~with~~ with great dominion, and does it according to his will. Nothing could stop Alex. the great. He wept for more worlds to conquer. He conquered everything. He was making plans to go west to conquer Italy and Europe when he died, but he thought that was just a backwoods section out in the wilderness, so that didn't amount to much. He had conquered all the civilized world. And so, he succeeds in everything in v.3, but then in v.4 his kingdom is broken and divided toward the four winds of heaven, but not to his ~~own~~ posterity, to others. Well, that's exactly what did happen to Alexander the Great. Question:.....AAM: That is a point which has very great importance in it. If you say, that Satan led Christ into the wilderness, and said, Take of these stones and make them bread, and Jesus withstood that temptation, and you read that another thing he did was to take him to the pinnacle of the temple and have him stand up there, and put him up there, and said, Jump over and make the angels hold you up, and then if in another gospel, you read the two things in reverse orders, some people have said, the Bible is absolutely true. These are told in two different orders, therefore, it must have happened twice. The temptation happened once in that order, once in the other order. Well, it is not necessary. It is not impossible it happened twice, but my guess is it didn't, that it happened once. But I would say the two things are told, now what order we tell them in. I could describe to you the visit which I made to Germany and to Italy in 1947, and then I could describe the visit I made to Italy in 1950, and then I could describe the visit I made to Germany and to Italy in 1955. And then I could say, Oh, but how different conditions are in Germany and Italy than they are in Brazil and Chile, and then I could go on to describe the visit I made to Brazil and to Chile in 1951. I would be going logically, not chronologically, and another time I could say, in 1947 I went to Germany and to Italy. In 50 I went to Italy and to Palestine, and in '51 I went to Brazil and to Chile, and in '55 I went to Germany and to Italy. Now, of course, they don't use dates that way. That's a comparatively recent invention using the dates. But you name the places, and one time you give them in an
