Eh, eh, eh, eh, eh, ready to go again. It's not _____. Yes, Miss Chung. Yes... Yes... (Question) What's your question? Yes, oh, yes, not remorse, ~~but~~ regret. Regret, no. No, some people have the idea ~~that~~ of God that God is a sort of like a wooden Indian(?), stands on the corner, /fixed, he is immovable, he unchangeable, he just stands there, and does nothing. That is not a biblical picture of God at all. God is active. God is active in what he does. He is active in what he thinks. He is active in what He feels. And when God created man to be a companion to God, and /man sinned, God ~~is~~ was grieved, and terribly grieved. His grief, it is not that it is greater than man not to have any emotion, ~~He~~ is greater than man to have a far greater emotion, and to have a real emotion, and deep emotion, and holy emotion. God is ~~not~~ grieved, and is all through the Bible God is not like /the neo-Platonists think of, ^{one} one that is a sort of, you can't think anything about him. He is just _____ restricted, immovable, unchangeable. _____ as I say like an wooden Indian. He is not that. He is a personality. He is not _____ body like that. He is not limited to a body, but He is a personality. Now the neo-Platonists say, You can't say God is good or God is bad, because that's limiting God. God is God _____ He is good or bad. That's not /biblical. The biblical teaching is that God is good; God is whole; God is just; God grieves over sin; God regrets _____; God sores(?) God joys in the fellowship with the redeemed / God is not greater than man to be devoid of emotion which man has. God has a perfect emotion, but /certainly there is nothing we have that God doesn't have except the possibility of falling into sin, which is a matter ~~of~~ of good thing but a bad thing, but every potentiality that we have _____ So, when we think of God as an absolute in the just there sense of /something that is just in the air /like the old neo-Platonic conception that is very definitely not a Christian one. ~~It is~~ It is like the idea some people
