to consider that there is a connection. If I heard them sing and I say "Oh, I heard some wonderful singing last summer." What does it mean? But you have to have a connection. And when He says it, He doesn't explain what the connection is but it would seem unless you can trace some connection to Satan's original fall, that the logical interpretation would be that it relates to a fall of his which is a result of either what they have done or of that which their preaching begins in. That would be my answer. You have to always interpret in the light of context. They say you can prove anything from the Bible and you certainly can or from any other book that was ever written, if you take a few words out of context. But ordinarily to know what something means, you have to have the context. to have the full understanding. Occasionally a few words stand absolutely by themselves, and they are a basis on which to interpret everything around it. But ordinarily they require <sup>light from the</sup> ~~some~~ context to know exactly what it says. Well, this then is

Satan--the strong one -- the great one with whom he divides the spoil and why does he divide the spoil? He divides the spoil under that _____ ( means to pour out) because that he has poured out his life, his soul unto death.

That's why he is able to divide the spoil with the strong. The humiliation resulted in His purifying and redeeming work. Because He has poured out His soul unto death and He was numbered with wicked ones. Being a Niphal, you would hardly expect an article. You could take וְ as the sign of an article, but here again, it is very definitely the sign of the meaning with. You have the two possibilities.

In English it doesn't make sense to take it to mean this or that. The funny thing in English, you can't translate into another language exactly because the English has two possibilities. Like I heard some one asked a riddle in German, He said
