

Hebrew. Well, when it's a case where it is a word which is clearly implied in the Hebrew though not expressed, then it is a difficult question, whether to use the italics or not, very difficult. (9 1/4) They were put in by the King James translators. The KJ translators used the italics to indicate words that were not in the original but they thought it necessary to put in, And like over in, is it in Luke, I read (break in record at 9 1/2, starting again at 10 1/2)

...interpretation that I gave there at 29 is certainly widely known, and it seems to me that everything fits into it, but everything does fit so nicely into it, that it seems a bit strange it isn't widely known, so I can't help thinking there may be points of question, problems in it that occurred to somebody else, that I might perhaps not have noticed. Don't any of you have any questions on it?

...similarity between chapter 29 and Isa.7. First, well, does Isa.7 say that they'll be rescued? I don't think it does, does it? I think that is further on, but the book of Immanuel says that they will be rescued, that is definite. But how about specifically, chapter 7? Mr. Grauley, would you have some ideas on that? (11 1/2) That is a definite point of agreement, they both are dealing with the alliance with Assyria, Now is there any rebuke in both chapters? What kind of rebuke? Rebuke against Judah for going on with the alliance. Now, let's say that the beginning of 29 and 5 that this alliance will turn out ~~ever~~<sup>evil</sup> for them, and certainly in the latter part of 7, it is said, that the alliance will turn out evil for them. But now you said rebuke to Judah for going on with this alliance--do you find any rebuke to Judah in chapter 7? Do you find any rebuke to Judah in chapter 29? Difference between the two? Well, now, let's say now here is a difference. Here is a truck full of apples and here's another truck full of ~~straw~~<sup>salt</sup>, well they are quite different, but you might say they have this in common, they both contain food, they're both trucks of food, the one is salt, and the one is apples. So that there is a great difference, and a slight ~~of~~ similarity. Now here is a truck filled with garbage and here is a truck filled with coal. There is
