

influence there and was an extremely able administrator. He wrote the Easter letter each year which went all over the empire and had a tremendous influence and the people more and more came to love him and I'm sure Constantius wished he hadn't given in to his brother and let Athanasias come back. Constantius realized that he could never make Arianism supreme as long as Athanasias was there in Alexandria. So in 353 when Constantius now had the whole empire in his control, he ordered that a council be held in the western section at which council certain administrative matters were to be taken up which were important for the well being of the church. Through this council the
