

kingdom Isaiah had predicted exile, and the people looked on exile as practically certain, Isa. ..I wish that Dr. Skinner could have been here for a discussion.

I ~~do not~~ don't like to say that the rain and snow comes down and does not return, it does return /Does this contradict science . Until or unless --first it has to do something before it can return. And here we have a future tense. It will not return, until after something has happened. So that in the future it comes down --it will come down. ~~This~~ But this perfect is previous to the returning.

In the perfect something will be completed and finished before it can return again. It will not return to heaven until ...it has ..Now, there is a question.

Is that a waw conjunctive ? What difference does it make to the sentence.

You see we use to translate it as if it will not return to heaven unless it has watered the earth and caused it to bring forth, and it has caused it to bud and it has given bread to the sower and bread to the eater, well that water better stay down here all time then but actually the water may soak the earth and what ~~remains~~ remains flows down to the ocean, or flows into a lake and then breaks up into heaven., or it may evaporate off the ground. The thing that the water has to do before it can .and the watering of the earth has certain results and these results occur after the water in general has returned to heaven. ^It would seem to me that these waws here would be waw conversives rather than waw conjunctive, indicating something that has been completed but a purpose that is to be accomplished by watering the earth. It will not return until ~~it has~~ it has watered the earth so that it will cause it to break forth and ~~cause~~ cause it to bud, and it will give seed to the sower and bread to the eater. Seed to the one who ~~wants~~ wants to sow and bread to the one who wants to eat. That is, the sowing and the eating are definitely future. They show continuous action, but a continuous action in the future., until this fruit has been born by --it starts the process but it can't return --the bearing of the fruit all follows the watering of the earth. But the watering is ~~the watering~~
