

does not tell you or give you the answer of the question that we are discussing. The question we are after is, what does this word mean. This word is translated here by the English version "borrow". What do we mean by borrow? The question isn't what ~~is~~ do the King James translators mean by borrow. The question is what do we mean now by the word? By borrow we mean to request someone or not only request but to secure your request from someone to give you something with a definite promise or with clear implication that you are going to return it. That is what we mean by borrow. Now I want you first to find out what the Hebrew word is. This is an assignment for everybody in the class. I want you to find out what the Hebrew word is used in every case where it speaks of the Israelites borrowing from the Egyptians. If there are different words, of course, take them separately. If there are the same words, deal with one.

(Question) Well, I think it is only in Exodus where it speaks of the Israelites borrowing of the Egyptians. If you find another case, take that into consideration also. ^{Here is our question.} I think it is only in Exodus. ^ This word in English means not merely to ask. You don't say I borrowed fifty dollars from the bank ~~and~~ if you went into the bank and asked them for fifty dollars and they said, no, you didn't borrow it. To borrow means to ask for and to get it. So that we ⁷⁶⁻¹⁰ It means a definite promise or clear implication that you are going to return. Now I want you to find at least two cases, ~~preferably~~ preferably five where this word is used in Scripture and I don't care whether the English translates it borrow or whether it translates it request or ask or require or how it translates it, but to find if possible five, at least two, instances where the word means to get something or at least to ask for something with the promise of return. If you cannot find it--you see this particular case is the one we are studying and therefore this case ~~is not~~ does not hold on our present question. We want to sight other cases as well. Now if you'll find a case where it says that ~~there is~~ a man went and he did whatever this word is from someone to get money for the harvest and said I'll pay you back next year. It presents a case in which there is involved a definite promise to pay. Or ~~if~~ where it tells
