

you that he did it and that it says that he repays that which was borrowed. That is an evidence that the Lord caused him to return it.

Now I want to also to find for me if you can two phases or five if you can where the Lord definitely <sup>76 7/11 1/2</sup> excluded a ~~tax~~ return. If you read that a king conquers a country and that he conquers that country and that he does whatever this word is the property of the people. Well, that hardly means that he promises to give it back. That is a case where he didn't. Now if you find a case where it says, "What does the Lord borrow from you?" What does the Lord borrow from you? <sup>That</sup> If you should keep His commandments and do right and should not tell lies. Now if the Lord borrows that from you then that means that He is going to return it to you. You see the sense wouldn't fit in that case. In that case if it used in a context like that there is clearly excluded any idea of a promise to return. Has everyone got the idea of what I mean?

Now someone, however, ought to have a question in his mind. Someone ought to say, "Here I am and I have had Hebrew now for a month or six weeks. Isn't this asking a good bit of me to go and to get the Hebrew word used in all instances in which it speaks of the Israelites borrowing things from the Egyptians, when they left Egypt? And to find the other cases in the Scripture where it is used and to give the incidents?" Well, for those of you who have had Hebrew already, of course, to look in Brown's instead of Brigg's Dictionary or in the Englishman's Hebrew Concordance would be the quickest way to get references to from which to find this. Those of you who have had a little Hebrew either of those might help you serve the case. But a person who has had no Hebrew whatever would still be able to do this particular thing. Because one who had had no Hebrew whatever, you could take Young's Concordance and could look up the word "borro" and you could see what Hebrew words are translated that way. In that concordance it might be that you didn't know a single word. That wouldn't be necessary to give you a transliteration in English letters. So you could find there how many Hebrew words are used with this translation. Then you proceed
