

came to earth, and so you will find some translations translate it afflicted and some translate it He humbled himself, and either is possible but I don't see any point in the _____, unless it is definitely giving His response and it is parallel to ...yes, that is a very good point here, this is Niphal, in the perfect, this is what has happened. He is driven and He has submitted. Then we see it vividly ~~vidid~~ occur, but He does not open His mouth --Don't you give any answers. Jesus said, They couldn't do a thing against me ~~unt-~~ unless the ~~poer-~~ power was given them. He refused to ~~make~~ make any answers to the charges, ~~because~~ because it was part of His work. Of course if it were imperfect, what form of the imperfect must it be. Hiphil --in other words He humbled Himself. The ending--you see the Hiphil, we will answer or we will be humbled. It's not ---I ~~don't~~ think that who ...yes, the Niphal perfect would be...all the perfect would be, but the imperfect ~~ends~~ ends in _____. All the participles...the problem there of course is that ...for the ~~Ayin~~ Ayin .. and not does He open His mouth, now Mr. Quek, ~~but~~ but he is humbled. This expresses a continuous action, a continuous action, i.e., he is humbling. He is oppressed and he is afflicted ... it sounds as if the two forms are same, the first, of course, is a perfect, and the next has to be a participle. He has been oppressed, but he is driven ... tyrannized over and he is humbling himself. This is the attitude that he is taking. He does not open his mouth. He does not answer. ~~It~~ It is a continuous action, and it fits better than the first one. Yes?(Q) The phrase hard-pressed is probably an English idiom which suggests that someone is ~~running~~ running, and is almost ... but not quite. That is an ordinary use of participle... He is in a difficult situation, but he is hoping to get out
