

one another. When we have a conflict between theologians and scientists, what is the answer? Which one is right? The fact is that both may be wrong. The Bible student may be wrong. The scientist may be wrong. No human being is an infallible guide. Only God is infallible.

We said, "Search the Scriptures, and rejoice in the insights which ~~come~~ come from any direction." We go on from the ~~unknown~~ unknown to the unknown in our investigation of the Bible, ~~-We learn-~~ learning more and more of what God has revealed to us. We go on from the known to the unknown in our investigation of the world that God has created, ~~learning-~~ learning more, constantly ~~possibly~~ learning more as we go forward, but keeping our feet solid ~~that~~ on that which has been definitely established. When theology and science collapse, let's examine each and see where errors have been made by the human interpreters. If there seems to be a complete contradiction, then let us ~~reexamine~~ reexamine the Biblical teaching very clearly, and make it sure that we are not reading into it. Having done so, stand upon it, and wait a little until the science catches up. The Bible is never out of date, but <sup>is</sup> ~~is~~ ahead of date.
